The conflict took place between the indigenous Dayak people and the migrant Madurese people from the island of Madura off Java. On the interdependence between electron-transfer processes and device performance in organic solar cells. The importance of the effects of molecular structure and of doping in the performance and carrier transport of organic semiconductors in photovoltaic devices is here discussed in view of the success of semi-conductor devices based on fullerene derivatives. The focus is on the aliphatic molecule PCDTBT (poly(3-hexylthiophene-2,5-diyl)-bis(thiophene-2-carboxylate-5-ylidene)) and its doping with the Lewis bases 2,2'-bithiophene-5-dicarboxylic acid (BSDCA) and 2,2':5'2''-terthiophene-5-carboxylic acid (TTCA). The two doping modifications differ with respect to the relative position of the anionic and cationic functionalities. BSDCA has a shorter C-C bond between the carboxylate and the thiophene-2-carboxylate anion, whereas TTCA has a longer C-C bond. BSDCA doping increases the photovoltage in PCDTBT in comparison to PCBM, while TTCA doping decreases it. In both cases the photovoltage is decreased compared to that of PCDTBT, indicating that the doping does not improve device performance by increasing electron transfer (ET) rates between the dopant and the donor. TTCA-doping in particular can strongly decrease the photovoltage, suggesting that this effect is due to an insufficient separation of the delocalised HOMOs of TTCA and PCDTBT. This is supported by the finding that the photovoltage of PCDTBT in the presence of TTCA is reduced when the substrate is excited. The comparison of the rates of ET in the absence and in the presence of the substrate indicates that ET in PCDTBT is dominated by direct electron tunneling from PCDTBT to BSDCA or to TTCA, with only a small contribution from a surface trap-assisted mechanism. in section 1701.25(B).
