What's New In?

Plurker is a new idea. The idea is that you have a single virtual real name to sign all of your posts. Your posts are also signed by your name. On the other hand, when somebody takes your username for their profile, their posts are also signed by your real name. This is done in a service hosted by a trusted third-party. The third party is very easy to integrate and easy to use. You don't have to sign up for a website and set yourself a password. It's just another tool for you to use to say what you want to say, or what somebody else wants to say. It's free to use, and it's open to anyone who wants to use it, from anywhere in the world. It is an easy to use tool, unlike e-mail, which is very hard to use, except for geeks, who make up more than half of the internet. Here is a video of the application: Reasons to use Plurker: - You use the platform for yourself, and it looks like you have a single username. A whole lot of websites were developed around the idea of having a single username across multiple websites. Plurker is trying to take a similar approach. - You want to have control over your own profile. If you don't want Plurker to know what you are doing, you can just make it look like another website without any new account. - You want to make it easy for people to share your username. - You want to do away with, or vastly reduce, the spam problem that Plurk is currently suffering from. - You want to be able to have your Twitter feed appear in the same interface. - You want an alternative to the PS3. But PS3 users already have a virtual name, it's called "PlayStation Network". What's in the application: - A real-name signup is easy. Just select any name, for example, "Rick", then click "Sign Up". - A very simple form is displayed. - New accounts are made very easy, by filling a blank field and pressing "Sign Up". - You can sign in with your Facebook account, or any other signup method supported by Plurk. - Your username is your account name. - You can set your profile information, like,
