Since AutoCAD 2009, a new approach has been used for importing and exporting files (especially DXF files). AutoCAD imports the drawing by creating an XML file and then reads that file from disk. This new approach has made it much easier to work on AutoCAD from a different computer or copy drawings into a new project. This approach can be accessed using the 'Import XML' command from the top-level menu bar. AutoCAD's other products include a text editor, the drawing program AutoCAD LT, AutoCAD Architecture and AutoCAD Electrical. As of AutoCAD 2009, AutoCAD LT supports several programming languages such as Lisp, Visual LISP, SQL, and JavaScript. AutoCAD LT also supports version control using Revit and other 2D CAD programs. Applications AutoCAD is used for drafting, graphic design, and architectural design. Its primary use is for 2D drafting, surface modeling, and architectural and structural design. It can be used to create top-down and isometric views. AutoCAD is the standard for drafting in the UK and USA. It was widely used in these countries for ten years before switching to other software including MicroStation, Abaqus, SolidWorks, and NX. It has been used in the UK by manufacturers for over 20 years, and in other European countries for about 10 years. AutoCAD is installed on most CAD workstations. There is a large number of third party applications which can be used for additional features such as floor plans, soil mechanics, animation, etc. These include: Cinema4D 3ds Max Adobe Creative Suite 3DMax V5 Adobe Photoshop MagicWand Studio (shareware) 3DStudio Max Multimedia Fusion 2 V-Ray (3ds Max Plugin) V-Ray (2ds Max Plugin) Keyboard shortcuts AutoCAD has a number of built-in keyboard shortcuts to make drawing easier. Most of these work on the default drawing that comes with AutoCAD. Many work on the actual drawing objects, such as the shape or dimensions. Many of the keyboard shortcuts for tools in AutoCAD take the form of a comma-separated list. These are listed in Table 1, which includes only the default shortcuts. Q: iOS Contacts Enumeration I'm writing a very simple application which will search the Contacts and the number of the phone is put into the application. The following code creates a single instance of the CNContactStore. contacts = [CNContactStore new]; But if I do the following: contacts = [[CNContactStore alloc] initWithAccount:[CNContactStore accountWithIdentifier:kContacts]]; then I get an error of type: 'NSInvalidArgumentException' The error I get is: -[CNContactStore accountWithIdentifier:] Why would this be occurring? A: The account property is deprecated, please use the currentAccount property instead. A: The accountWithIdentifier: method is not the same as the currentAccount property, so you need to use the latter. Using your second example, you would want to do the following: contacts = [[CNContactStore alloc] initWithAccount:[CNContactStore currentAccount]]; However, currentAccount is not available until iOS 8.1, so if you are working with earlier versions, you'll have to create a new instance of CNContactStore and put that in a global variable. Here is a blog post with some more details about currentAccount and its relationship to accountWithIdentifier:.
