File Organizer GNOME Category:Desktop environmentsQ: To what extent is the "synchronize to another device" function actually "synchronizing"? I'd like to synchronize two Android devices (frequently connected) with Dropbox, for the purpose of syncing files. However, each of the devices reports a different dropbox-url, and I can't choose to just choose one of them (and dropbox doesn't offer a way to select between multiple urls, only between my computer and a selected phone number). I'm wondering if the only way to 'synchronize' these devices is to select a dropbox-server and then use the dropbox android app to sync both simultaneously. If so, how far does the sync progress? Is it part way done on each device, or is it like a status bar on a music player that you have to tap to know what is happening? A: Per the Dropbox docs: With Dropbox for Android, you'll need to point both your Android device and your computer to the same Dropbox folder. When you open the application, you can select the device to sync to. Your computer and device will be set up to automatically connect to the same Dropbox
