* Total icons size 90+ items * Very well compressed * Tons of effects * True transparency * Hand-painted icons * Small size * Customizable color and size * Integrated into Windows Explorer * MS Office 2007 icons compatible Category:Windows 7Q: dynamic javascript dropdown selection I have an asp.net page to edit product order information. I need to add a drop down list to a table, so that when the user changes the item chosen, the quantity listed next to it will change as well. I want to choose from a list of options based on what the user chooses in the drop down list. Here is an example of what I have so far: The user can choose from the drop down list, the quantity and total will be displayed in the text boxes. I've been trying to get this to work for hours, but I have been going in circles. A: Here's a simple example - very similar to yours : In this example the options are hard coded. In your case, you'll have to use JavaScript to get the new list of options using AJAX. Web users are increasingly relying on web searches for making timely decisions and for providing a competitive advantage over their rivals. The evolution of web search engines has been no exception. While a car is driven, vibrations are propagated from the car's engine via a drive shaft to the transmission, thereby producing vibrations that are transmitted to the body and thence to the vehicle passenger compartment. These vibrations are uncomfortable, and car manufacturers are constantly seeking vibration dampers that reduce the vibrations. One known way of reducing the vibrations of a car's engine is to mount a fluid-filled vibration damper between the engine and a part of the transmission, such as the input shaft, and to connect the damper to the engine with a flexible coupling. Since the damper is so-called a xe2x80x9chang-upxe2x80x9d damper, it is commonly referred to as a xe2x80x9chang-up damperxe2x80x9d. The fluid-filled damper includes an inner member that is fixedly connected to the engine, and an outer member that is fixedly connected to the transmission. The inner and outer members contain damping fluid, and the damper operates as a negative spring. The input shaft, outer member, and inner member constitute a flexible coupling, and the damper provides resistance to the input shaft's rotation while the coupling is bent, as the shaft travels out of alignment with the transmission. Such dampers require air
