We are incredibly proud of the level of control we can now achieve on the pitch and can only be limited by the volume of data we can access.” “As the only technology that’s able to recreate this football truth, we are confident that our partnership with FIFA, the most trusted brand in football, will deliver another record-breaking and industry-leading FIFA.”

“It’s a real honor to be working with EA SPORTS to make FIFA the best sports game in the world. Entertainment sent BlizzardPlanet today a "dispatch" of emails to players who have used the Relay Race - a group event in World of Warcraft - to get a free copy of the Korean version of the game, Diablo 3. The offer appears to be in response to a posting by one of Blizzard's public relations employees that Blizzard is trying to figure out how to gift a free copy of its Korean version of Diablo 3 to anyone who has used the Relay Race. The email - which seems to have been generated by the account of Brian "TheHarbinger" Cook - encouraged players who have done the Relay Race to "Please just fill in the following form and attach a copy of your email address." The email also requested players send a copy of their in-game account. The email noted that the "offer is valid only for the period from April 19th to April 29th, 2011 and is non-transferable. We appreciate your understanding." A Blizzard representative told GameSpot, "At no time are we planning to provide the Korean copy of

Q: Why does ServicePointManager.DefaultConnectionLimit get ignored?
On windows, when i run this program:

```
static void Main(string[] args) { ManualResetEvent allDone = new ManualResetEvent(false);
```

```
Console.WriteLine("Starting Client..."); //
execute some stuff...
Console.WriteLine("All done.");
allDone.Set(); } I see this output in the console: Starting Client... All done.
Everything works fine. When i set the ConnectionLimit in the ServicePointManager to 10, I get this output: Starting Client... All done. The program doesn't even make it to the Console.WriteLine("Starting Client...")
statement. I can't quite work out why the DefaultConnectionLimit is ignored. I did find this previous SO question but it's really old. The accepted answer applies to a version of .Net which is no longer available.
A: The actual problem seems to be related to the ServicePoint.GetConnectionState function. The following code returns a IPEndPoint which to the best of my knowledge is the IPEndPoint that the connection is currently on.
ServicePoint.GetConnectionState() If i set

the ServicePoint to a new address and call this function again I get a new IPEndPoint which is different from the one returned by the ServicePoint.GetConnectionState function. So it appears that the setting of the ServicePoint.DefaultConnectionLimit has no effect until the connection has been made via a call to ServicePoint.GetConnectionState and not by the ServicePoint.AcceptSocket call. This behaviour doesn't seem to
