- Paracrine regulation of pancreatic endocrine cell development by the epithelial cells surrounding the organ. Cell:cell communication in endocrine pancreatic islets plays a critical role in the establishment, maintenance and function of the islet. The fibrous capsule surrounding the islets of Langerhans, the so-called capsule of Dohle, appears to be highly important for the structural and functional integrity of the islet. However, little is known about the potential role of capsule fibroblasts in the regulation of islet development and function. In this study, we have investigated a potential role for the capsule fibroblasts in the activation of the islet-specific transcription factor MAFA in capsular cell (CC) line 832/13 as well as in primary fetal rat CC. We show that co-culture of 832/13-CC with islets potentiated the expression of MAFA in the islets of Langerhans. In contrast, when both cell types were cultured as monolayers, MAFA expression in the islets was strongly down-regulated. These data indicate that cell:cell communication between CC and islet cells leads to a differential activation of MAFA in the islets. The expression of insulin, a marker for pancreatic endocrine cells, was also up-regulated in 832/13-CC co-cultures, compared to monolayer cultures. The cultures exhibited heterogeneous mixtures of endocrine and exocrine cell morphologies. We conclude that CCs play a role in the fine-tuning of islet endocrine cell development by eliciting a paracrine positive feedback on the endocrine lineage in the islets.
