A study of the potential toxicity of chemical mixtures to freshwater invertebrate life in the province of Trento was carried out by a multi-model approach. The tests were performed by using a 48-h aquarium test and comet assay. The data obtained by the two tests were combined by using the acute median effective concentration for 48-h LC50 (EC50) as the relevant predictor value and by analysing the data using cluster analysis and analysis of variance (ANOVA). The life and reproductive activity of the Lumbricus terrestris (Oligochaeta) and the Brontispa longissima (Trichoptera) were considered the most sensitive biological indicators, as they were affected in 99 and 100%, respectively,
