Treasury Department Borrows Less Money in First Quarter June 13, 2016 | Paul McHugh Photo: Wikimedia Commons Treasury Department Borrows Less Money in First Quarter President Trump's order to withhold funds from sanctuary cities, however, has triggered a wave of adoption in state and local governments of so-called sanctuary policies - that is, practices by municipalities that discourage cooperation with federal law enforcement agents. First-quarter borrowing by the federal government actually increased, a trend that is likely to continue for the rest of the year. Over the last 30 years, the first quarter has generally been the weakest quarter in borrowing, especially when the government is running below full capacity. But the increase in borrowing for the first quarter was entirely the result of a short-term increase in the borrowing required to finance operating costs, which are projected to continue falling due to a number of forces. Treasury Department Borrowing Total public debt outstanding at the end of the first quarter was $15.6 billion, or $463 billion in constant dollars. This is up from $15.2 billion in the fourth quarter, but below the peak of $467.5 billion in the third quarter of last year. These figures are seasonally adjusted. In the first quarter, the federal government borrowed $13.1 billion to finance obligations that must be met in the current fiscal year – this is the difference between the budget deficit of $438.2 billion and the cash balance of $466.4 billion at the end of the first quarter. The cash balance at the end of the quarter was adjusted to reflect tax receipts, which normally decline in the first quarter as receipts are less than expected. Federal Operating Budgets The first quarter is also generally the slowest quarter for an operating budget – that is, the portion of a year’s spending that occurs during the year rather than in advance. For the government to finance a short-term rise in the cash balance, d0c515b9f4

I really like the silver finish but my kitchen sink is silver...will that work? If i can bring it will it still be able to see the hardware within the sink and cabinetry??? I'm not able to measure but I'd estimate the amount you should be able to put into the tub to be close to 1-1/4" deep at the center of the tub. They're not supposed to be able to see the hardware, as long as you keep it away from the front edge of the tub. You probably wouldn't have to worry about it even with a pedestal, unless you get that ridiculous thing where the pedestal goes all the way under the tub. My guess is that they are making it so you have to drill through 2 holes for the attachment points for the waste pipe and water supply pipe. If that's the case, when the tub is mounted on the floor, just make sure that your waste pipe (if you have one) is below the level of the tub. +1 for the supplied holes. Don't even think of drilling in a non-supplied hole. I've tried to get a few different pictures but they will load on this thread just fine as attachments. If your plumbing is under your tub and you are contemplating a pedestal type install, you are going to want to consider ditching the tub. That's a great question. Is there a difference in the metal-pane look of the tubs? I don't want some clear plastic look. I'm leaning toward staying with the tub for now. The style of tub I wanted was $2,600 so I didn't want to put it in my budget for the
