I recently switched to ASP.NET MVC from ASP.NET WebForms and I'm curious how the submit button is handled in MVC. Do you have to manually submit the form if you have a submit button on it? Is the data sent to a controller automatically? Or is there a way to send it yourself? A: The short answer is, it's in the browser. When the form is submitted, the browser will automatically submit the contents of the form fields with the submit button, just as it did in forms developed with ASP.NET WebForms. This is also true if you use Javascript to capture the "Enter" key without submitting the form. Saves sending one more request in addition to the form data to the server for the form. The Innovation Alliance and the Technical University of Denmark (DTU) have taken part in the inaugural European Graphene Flagship project. The project will spend four years investing in fundamental research of graphene. Graphene is a material that could revolutionise many important areas in science and technology, such as material science, electronic engineering, or super computing. “Graphene is the strongest material in the world and it is also light, flexible, cheap and conducts very well. It is predicted to have a huge impact on science and technology but the more we research the more we realise that the difficulties lie ahead,” says Erik Sørensen, who is responsible for the DTU-measurements collaboration in the Flagship. “This is why we are so eager to collaborate with the Innovation Alliance.” Their work is based around exploiting graphene’s unique properties. “We use a contact scheme that is one of the most accurate ways of measuring charge transport properties of graphene. This scheme has been developed by the Innovation Alliance to make sure that we have a true picture of the actual charge transport properties of the material. We will also develop methods to make it easy to mass produce large graphene devices in a reproducible manner,” says Ole Hansen, who works as a postdoc
