Downloads Vector Magic 1.1.Very small numbers of copies of this magazin can be found. Although they are beautiful, there is only one. Every element of this issue was designed and fabricated in Oxford, USA, with the help of The New World Library, and published by Foster and Wells in Oxford, UK. They printed a total of 1,120 copies of the magazine, of which twenty-one were for overseas distribution. The Magazine is an abstract of the main topic or central theme of the current philosophical discourse. Through careful discussion and selection of books, articles, and other works, the Magazine takes its position in the question, and makes a general proposal, in a way to which, at the same time, its possible answers are given, and which, finally, invites the reader to ponder on what is "in the air". Like the related organization The New World Library (1925-1957), the magazine also had a literary and cultural orientation, which was an early link to the "British" and European avant-garde. Although not published for two years after the magazine's founding, the magazine was edited from 1939-1940 by the composer and dramatist Jonathan Miller (1914-1983), with an additional contributor for every issue.." "Wouldn't that be nice?" "For things to work out between you and me?" "I'm willing to work on it." "I think I can." "I don't want to be the reason that it doesn
