Big Boss, Arsene Wenger, to miss parties as reward for successful season LONDON -- Arsene Wenger has decided that his contribution to the greatest football club in the world's greatest football league will be rewarded with time spent with his family, a holiday and probably a rather classy shirt. No matter how successful he has been at Arsenal, Wenger will be absent from the usual summer parties, dinners and booze-fuelled celebrations. In his near 200 years of pulling on an Arsenal shirt, he has never earned an official title or a trophy that could be handed out at a Players' Player of the Year dinner. Yet after a season in which he has claimed to be the greatest manager in the world and set his team up to win the title, it will be his managers who will begin collecting the plaudits. "I cannot come to watch the match, I cannot come to watch the trophy presentation. I won't be at home because I don't want to celebrate the title." When pressed about whether he feels that a title has been won, he said: "No. I don't feel that because I won't be there. I'm at home on Sunday. I won't be there, it's a different feeling. Maybe, when you want to be there, you've got more respect, you're more motivated, and you're ready to celebrate. "For me, it's a bit strange. But I'm happy for the team. I like it when we win the title because that's what we wanted. We wanted to win the title. I didn't want to win the
