DUBAI (Reuters) - Western countries accuse Iran of sponsoring violence in Lebanon, where Hezbollah has grown increasingly powerful since taking part in the war which toppled Syria's President Bashar al-Assad last year. Tehran has denied the charges. Lebanese Hezbollah leader Sheikh Hassan Nasrallah speaks to a Lebanese TV interviewer during an interview in Sidon Lebanon December 11, 2009. REUTERS/Jamal Saidi
The United States, Israel,

Saudi Arabia and the European Union have imposed economic sanctions on Iran, accusing it of supporting militant groups, a charge Tehran denies. Since the war, Hezbollah, a strong ally of Assad, has gained political clout in Lebanon and further consolidated its position in the area by fighting al Qaeda-linked Nusra Front militants in Lebanon, Syria and beyond. Foreign diplomats say Hezbollah's rapid and close military cooperation with the Syrian army has in effect expanded the group's role in Syria beyond what was anticipated when it took part in the war against Assad last July, helping strengthen it in Lebanon. “Iran is the driving force that has allowed Hezbollah’s military cooperation with the Syrian regime and that it won’t be easy for Tehran to go back to Lebanon,” said a Western diplomat in Beirut.

LEBANESE HEZBOLLAH ON THE CALCULATE

Lebanon is not one of the world’s major oil exporters, but has natural resources such as phosphate and gas. Iran and Russia are among the top oil suppliers in the region. “Hezbollah is well positioned to increase its leverage in Lebanon as it is one of the only organizations in the country that is able to lead and control the sectarian balance,” said Moataz Sadr, a Middle East analyst at Abu Dhabi’s Emirates Centre for Strategic Studies and Research. Hezbollah has grown rapidly and now controls three cabinet seats, parliament’s majority and a major share of votes in parliamentary and local elections. “Iran is willing to pay whatever price to ensure that Hezbollah becomes the leading player in Lebanon,” said another Western diplomat in Beirut.

Politicians who have recently visited Iran say it is expanding its foothold in Lebanon, including a key port and naval base on its western coast in the Mediterranean. Defence analyst Sadr said: “Iran is looking to the extent of Hezbollah’s involvement in Lebanon to understand whether India’s Goa remains much like it was in the 1950s. For nearly a century the beach front city has been littered with numerous tourist resorts, but Goa tourism industry in Goa has recently experienced a massive influx of tourists, mostly from the UK and Ireland. Having gone through this period of prosperity and growth, my readers may have some questions about the future of India's oldest city. So let's take a trip back in time to the Goa of years past. With the rise of Chinese tourists, it is not surprising to see that some of the earliest developments were from the Beijing Capital Group. Photo credit: Patrick Pleul / Flickr The second image is of the old airport terminal in Goa's Panjim. It appears that the new terminal has been built due to increased competition between Goa and South Goa airport, Cape of Good Hope. As the increase in the number of travellers means more business for the hotels, it is only logical that the airport be changed from the PPP (public private partnership) model to private ownership. The third image is from Magdalla, Goa. The house pictured was named the official residence of the former President of India, Ramnath Kovind. The building has been converted into a retreat for Kovind and his family. However, it is a long time for these images to have lived so long on the internet. The images have not just been put up on blogs, they have also been captured by the more popular citizen journalism project on Flickr. The United States
