And right from the very start I started writing not out of a passion for this craft but with a secret desire to create a fictional character. Not many people know that my very first writing was fiction. A schoolboy mistake that I have repeated a few times in my life. It would require quite an effort, which I was too lazy to invest into. The paradox I think it's quite a paradox, that at the very same time, when you dream of being a writer you're also afraid to admit that you're not worthy of being called one. Then there's a second paradox, as I have to admit that despite the fact that I have been trying to write since the end of 2003, I hadn't written a single word since 2006. And then there's the third paradox. That's the thing I dream about since the very beginning, but still I'm not a pro at that. What are you supposed to do if one believes one is a pro and the others don't? The answer is simple: you write regardless. Write, and then stop wasting your time comparing yourself to others. I want to finish this article as fast as possible. Here's the post I've been meaning to write for many, many years. So, the question is, have I finished it? How I started On Friday, 22nd of June 2012, I tweeted out the following: "Why don't we all have a day of writing? I'll write about the last time I wrote, about the author I'd like to be, about the proof I'd like to provide that I am a writer, about the pro writer I'd like to be." And it took place. During one week, 1cdb36666d
