Aviary offers unlimited high-quality web images and allows users to edit, share, and produce them on Facebook, Twitter, Pinterest, Tumblr, and other social networks. One of the most useful features is the companion mobile app that works with Macs, iOS devices, and Android devices. The app works in the same way as the browser, but it adds a convenient tablet interface and a large-screen perspective for viewing images. Although Aviary is not as well known as Photoshop, it's often used by digital designers and bloggers who work with images. * Aviary: www.aviary.com * Aviary app (Android): ``; `` * Aviary app (iOS): `` ## Use Wedding Planner If you're into weddings, you can easily add your wedding photos to Facebook and Twitter with Wedding Planner (www.theweddingplanner.com). This incredibly simple tool allows you to capture a beautiful image of you, your groom, and your photographer and then just drag the image right onto your favorite social network to share it with your family and friends. After you share your image on a social network, Wedding Planner can create a handy link back to your wedding album that you can click on to return.

Q: How to add the ggplot2 stacked bar chart in the same output in R The following code works fine, but instead of a graph in a window it puts the graph in the R console. How do I get it to present the graph in a window? library(tidyverse) library(lubridate) library(fms) library(dplyr) d1 %>% mutate(yday = ymd(yday)) %>% filter(ymd_hms(yday) > ymd_hms(ymd("2015-08-25"))) %>% ggplot(aes(x = yday, y = freq, fill = Freq)) + geom_bar(position = 'stack', stat = 'identity', width = 0.6, se = FALSE) + geom_text(aes(label = ..count..), position = position_stack(vjust = 0.5)) + coord_flip() here is a URL for the output (the bar chart): A: You can use the server.R to get the desired result. library(tidyverse) library(lubridate) library(fms) library(dplyr) server %>% mutate(yday = ymd(yday)) %>% filter(ymd_hms(yday) > ymd_hms(ymd("2015-08-25"))) %>% ggplot(aes(x = yday, y = freq, fill =

Paris Saint-Germain could secure a staggering €140m in overall spending this summer, if players including Neymar, Kylian Mbappe and Angel Di Maria don't join Liverpool in the £200m Champions League budget. The figures, published by The Times, will shock anyone who thinks PSG are a tax-avoiding French multinational equivalent to Nike. At the top of the list are Neymar and Mbappe, the two strikers signed for €222m for two seasons. An annual salary of €14m with add-ons will be paid from the summer. There is also an estimated €100m on wages for four years, plus the estimated cost of the signings of Mbappe, Di Maria and Dani Alves. Players allowed to leave after the first three years are Kylian Mbappe (free), Adrien Rabiot and Thiago Motta. Paris Saint-Germain's funds will cost Liverpool £200m - but not all of it Read more The €140m would be the biggest cost to Liverpool, who also have Philippe Coutinho, Christian Benteke, Adam Lallana, Joe Gomez and Lucas Leiva on wages, but only one player who cost a similar amount – Alisson. The club's total spending last summer was around £170m, with £24m on wages, which is £20m more than Arsenal had to spend to come second to Liverpool. The reasons for the different numbers is not hard to see – Arsenal had the joint-biggest costliest squad of any Premier League club, with a total of about £196m on wages, plus a £45m sell-on fee for Alexis Sanchez. PSG, by contrast, are spending about £25m a year on wages, plus £3m per year on the wages of key players such as Neymar and Thiago Silva, each of whom cost about £30m. Arsenal's squad had a slightly different make up and far fewer players who are now considered long-term deals. There were only five elite-level players in the squad, as opposed to 11 at Liverpool. The club spent £17m more per year than Liverpool did last summer, and took a £7m hit for losing an extra player. By contrast, PSG have spent £17m less than Liverpool did last summer, even though they have signed two players of similar calibre to Liverpool
