The World's Game: FIFA is the global sports entertainment phenomenon. Featuring the World's Game Ball on the cover, FIFA is the number one sports franchise. Ten times World Cup Champions, FIFA is the pinnacle of football. Beating competition in esports across the globe, FIFA is the most played franchise on Xbox and the world's best-selling sports franchise on Xbox LIVE. Created by EA Canada, FIFA brings people from around the world, together in more ways than ever before to enjoy football (soccer) on Xbox, PC, iOS and Android - regardless of their skill level. New Modes: Season of Innovation The Last word: Fantasy Matchday First off, the usual obligatory statement of how excited I am to be joining the FIFA E3 team and what an incredible opportunity it is to get a sneak peak at the new content we're bringing to Xbox One, PS4 and FIFA Ultimate Edition for PC later this year. For all the many great insights provided by the E3 2016 stage demos, there were a few things missing from them that ultimately made me realise just how far the team has come. That's not to say I think I know all of the answers, but I have a clearer understanding of how their original vision for FIFA might have shaped the future of the series. So, let's start with... Classic Fantasy Matchday Although arguably not the most important addition, I'm very pleased to have been able to play around with the much-anticipated new mode this morning. It is by far the most immediately appealing of the new features - although I did spend more than 20 minutes running around while pretending to be the referee just to try and get a handle on some of the finer details. From the first match, you are presented with a lineup for your team and a display of how the rest of the season will unfold. The change to the point of view is a very welcome one - it will allow you to see the big picture and make changes in the middle of the season. As you make and lose players, the final position of the team is put into context and your performance calculated out. As I mentioned in the gameplay section, I've been playing as Liverpool - and have had a long-time affinity for the club ever since I heard the great Ian Rush, at that time still at the peak of his powers. He's the first person
