- An icon that simulates a spinning fan and represents the amount of power required to cool down a set of computer's CPU cores. - Displays and shows the amount of power consumed by the CPU cores to cool off the system. - Includes a drop-down menu to select the number of cores and the overall usage that you want to monitor. - You can easily configure the icon to run as a desktop sidebar gadget or tray icon. - Automatically changes the background image according to the selected setting. - You can place the gadget on top of any other window that is running in the system. - You can easily change the icon's appearance by adding shadow effect to the spinning fan and make it transparent. - The gadget can be configured using the Settings panel. - Supports Internet Explorer 6 and 7. - Version 1.0.1 includes bug fixes. ===== Tips: - The gadget can only be used if the gadget file has been added to your system's Startup folder. To add it, right-click the Start menu, point to All Programs, choose Accessories, and click on the Startup folder. Add the CPU Fan icon by clicking on the file name. You can add as many icons as you want in this folder. - By default, the application displays only the power usage information for the currently selected cores. To show the power requirements for other cores, click on the 'Settings' section. You can then define and select the cores you want to include in the power calculation. - If you have more than 4 CPU cores, you can configure the application to show the power usage for all cores by selecting 'All Cores' from the drop-down menu. - The gadget can be configured to be shown as a separate window or a desktop sidebar. For this, click on the Layout tab in the Settings window and check the 'Show in Window' option. - For the gadget to work correctly, at least two system requirements must be met. Either 1.) the system must be able to shut down the current process, and 2.) the system must have sufficient memory to run the application. To check the system's memory requirement, press Ctrl+Alt+Del and click on the task manager. It should display the amount of RAM on your machine. - The gadget only requires 2.5 MB of RAM. - To stop the gadget from running in the background, double-click on the widget icon. You can choose to make the gadget

CPU Fan is a small utility that displays the current CPU usage in percentage and displays average usage percentages to help you select an appropriate fan speed for your system. It can display the CPU usage from any one of the 4 cores available in a multi-core processor. Fan Speed Calculation: CPU Fan calculates your CPU fan speed using the resource usage and frequency of your system. The speed of the fan automatically increases or decreases depending on the calculated usage. The CPU Fan calculates the average usage percentage by taking the maximum and the minimum usage from the available cores. Settings: From the Settings menu, you can select if you want to show a clock icon in the gadget. The icon also indicates when the fan is spinning. You can also change the fan speed at which the gadget calculates the average usage percentage.
