The relationship between periodontitis and immune function in patients with newly diagnosed systemic lupus erythematosus. It has been reported that patients with systemic lupus erythematosus (SLE) have poor oral hygiene, periodontitis and increased risk of infection and disease flares. The objective of this study was to assess immune status and periodontal status of patients with SLE. A total of 40 patients with SLE were consecutively recruited, as were 41 healthy controls, matched by age, gender and socioeconomic status. Demographic and clinical data were collected by means of a questionnaire, medical records and the oral examination. Immune function was assessed by measuring the levels of circulating CD3, CD4, CD8 and CD19; cytokines such as TNF- α , IL-6 and IFN- γ ; and the proportion and counts of activated T-cells [CD28-CD8(+) and HLA-DR+] in the gingival tissue. Patients with SLE had a statistically significantly higher TNF- α level compared with controls (median 24.5 vs. 19.9 pg/ml, $p=0.02$), and significantly higher proportion of HLA-DR (74.8 vs. 54.8%, $p=0.01$) and CD28-CD8(+) T-cells (20.5 vs. 4.9%, $p=0.01$) but significantly lower proportion of CD4/CD8 ratio (0.85 vs. 1.12, $p=0.04$) compared with controls. The CD4/CD8 ratios correlated positively with the percentage of CD4 cells and negatively with the percentage of CD19 cells in the gingival tissue ($r=0.38$, $p=0.01$ and $r=-0.35$, $p=0.03$ respectively). Patients with SLE had poor oral hygiene and periodontitis, with increased proportions of HLA-DR and CD28-CD8(+) T-cells, reduced levels of serum cytokines and CD4/CD8 ratio in the gingival tissue compared with healthy controls. These results suggest that the immune and inflammatory systems and dental health are related in SLE patients.Q: How can I set up my Firebase Realtime Database for server-side data storage and in-browser data synchronization?
