The people at Microsoft are very bad with their intermittent interruptions. They really stupidly and carelessly deserve what they get. The commercial customers apparently outnumber all of the home users. These people are virtually all idiots who do not care about the system. They just want to play on the latest TEMPORARILY craved program that Microsoft comes up with next. The people who did this for a living are paid to go without a job due to their constant obsolescence commitments. I'm going to have to agree with this entire article. I have an XP Home and Win7 install... i barely use my XP install anymore due to Win7. I normally run my XP in VBox and use Win7 in the main machine.... I've never bothered to setup proper XP home servers in my past, I just use the most current operating system, and it works...
